1	2026-10-02 · 9:00 AM PT · buyer education · minimal layout Your pre-approval is a ceiling, not a budget. A lender calculates the largest payment your file can carry. It does not account for strata fees, property tax, maintenance, or the life you want to keep living once the keys change hands. • Strata fees and special levies • Property tax and insurance • Maintenance, parking and utilities Borrow to a number that still leaves room to live. Working out what you can comfortably carry? Let's set a real budget together. 2	2026-10-05 · 9:00 AM PT · staging & presentation · band layout An empty room is harder to sell than a furnished one. Without furniture, buyers lose the scale of a space and start counting flaws instead of imagining a life. Bare floors amplify echo, mark every scuff, and make generous rooms read as small. Staging gives a room a purpose, and a purpose gives it value. Preparing a vacant home for market? Let's plan the presentation together. 3	2026-10-07 · 9:00 AM PT · negotiation & strategy · collage layout Silence is a position, not an absence of one. The instinct in a negotiation is to fill every pause with another concession. A measured response protects your leverage and tells the other side that your terms were considered, not improvised. Answer deliberately. Never reflexively. Heading into a negotiation? Let's prepare your position together. 4	2026-10-09 · 9:00 AM PT · investment & location · frame layout A corner lot is a different asset, not just a different address. Two street frontages bring more natural light, easier access and often more development potential. They also bring more exposure, more sidewalk to maintain and setbacks that can shrink the usable yard. • Light and access from two frontages • Wider setbacks and less private yard • More frontage to maintain year round Buy the trade-off you actually want to live with. 5	2026-10-12 · 9:00 AM PT · process & logistics · minimal layout Completion day and possession day are rarely the same day. Completion is when title and money transfer. Possession is when the keys are yours. The gap between them is short, but it decides when movers can book, when utilities switch, and when the first night in the new home actually happens. Plan the move around possession, not completion. 6	2026-10-14 · 9:00 AM PT · luxury positioning · band layout Some homes sell without ever appearing on a public portal. At the top of the market, privacy can matter more than reach. A discreet, curated introduction to a short list of qualified buyers protects the seller's circumstances and the home's position. The quietest sale is often the most controlled one. Considering a private sale? Let's design the approach together. 7	2026-10-16 · 9:00 AM PT · buyer education · collage layout A strata's contingency reserve fund tells you how the building is run. The fund is the building's savings for the repairs it already knows are coming. A healthy balance, read against a current depreciation report, is the difference between planned maintenance and a special levy. • The current reserve balance • The most recent depreciation report • Any special levies already approved Read the fund before you fall for the finishes. Reviewing strata documents? Let's read them together. 8	2026-10-19 · 9:00 AM PT · negotiation & strategy · frame layout The length of your subject period is part of your offer. Price gets the attention, but a seller weighing two similar offers looks at how long the property stays conditional. A shorter, well-prepared subject window carries real weight, provided the due diligence is genuinely ready. Shorten the timeline only when the homework is already done. Structuring an offer? Let's decide the timeline together. 9	2026-10-21 · 9:00 AM PT · investment & location · minimal layout The ten minutes around a home shape its value as much as the home itself. Groceries, transit, schools and a decent coffee within a short walk are the amenities people use daily, and daily use is what sustains demand when a market softens. Buy the radius, not only the address. 10	2026-10-23 · 9:00 AM PT · process & logistics · band layout The paperwork you gather before listing decides how smoothly the sale closes. Title, survey, permits, warranties and strata records are far easier to collect now than during a five-day subject window with a buyer waiting. • Title search and any registered charges • Permits and receipts for past work • Strata minutes, bylaws and financials A prepared file removes the reasons a deal stalls. Getting ready to list? Let's build the document package together. 11	2026-10-26 · 9:00 AM PT · luxury positioning · collage layout Materials tell the truth about a renovation. Solid hardware, honest stone, properly hung doors and clean tile transitions signal a build that was not rushed. Thin veneers and filler at the edges say the opposite, whatever the listing photos suggest. Quality shows up at the edges, where shortcuts hide. Assessing a renovation? Let's look at the details together. 12	2026-10-28 · 9:00 AM PT · staging & presentation · frame layout A buyer forms an opinion before they reach the front door. The walk from the sidewalk sets the tone for everything after it. Trimmed edges, a clean entry, exterior lights that work and a door that opens smoothly quietly promise that the rest of the home was cared for too. • Clean, defined edges and a swept path • Exterior lights that all work • A front door and hardware in good order The first impression is made outside. Preparing your home for market? Let's start at the sidewalk together. Three ages matter more than most of the feature list.

The roof, the furnace and the hot water tank each have a predictable service life and a predictable replacement cost. Knowing where each one sits turns a vague worry into a number you can plan around.

- Roof: age, material and last repair
- Furnace: age and service history
- Hot water tank: age and capacity

Know the ages, and the surprises stop being surprises.
