1	2026-08-24 · 9:00 AM PT · buyer education · frame layout Strata minutes tell the story the listing won't. Before removing subjects on a Vancouver condo or townhome, the strata documents deserve a careful read: • Minutes that reveal upcoming repairs and levies • Depreciation reports on the building's true condition • Contingency funds that signal healthy management The building you are buying into matters as much as the unit itself. Writing an offer on a strata property? Let's review the documents together. 2	2026-08-26 · 9:00 AM PT · staging & presentation · minimal layout Depersonalize the space. Don't sterilize it. Buyers need room to imagine their own life in a home, but an empty shell gives them nothing to feel. The balance is deliberate: family photos and collections go, while warmth stays through texture, greenery, and considered styling. A home should feel ready for its next chapter, not stripped of every story. Preparing your home for market? Let's stage it with intention together. 3	2026-08-28 · 9:00 AM PT · seller strategy · band layout Your listing's first showing happens on a screen. Nearly every buyer meets a home online before they ever step inside. Professional photography decides whether that first meeting earns a second one. • Composed angles that respect the home's proportions • Lighting that lets each room breathe • A sequence that walks buyers through the space Presentation is not a detail of the marketing plan. It is the marketing plan. 4	2026-08-31 · 9:00 AM PT · investment & location · collage layout Follow the transit map to tomorrow's value. Infrastructure investment is one of the most reliable long-term signals in real estate. Neighbourhoods gaining rapid transit access consistently see demand build years before the first train arrives, as commutes shorten and amenities follow. Buy where the city is going, not only where it has been. Curious which Vancouver corridors are positioned for growth? Let's map your options together.
